BOOK OF THE WEEK

I discovered a fantastic resource for librarians and readers this week - NetGalley allows you to request proof copies of books which are due to be published soon and read them first! A librarian's dream, especially when I'm always looking for new things to recommend to our young people! I was very excited to see the upcoming title from Non Pratt on there. Every Little Piece of My Heart is a story about relationships, grief, the nature of sadness and heartbreak, and growing up. It sounds like a typical "teen" book, but it is beautifully written and characterised.

ONLINE RESOURCE OF THE WEEK

National Museums
Scotland

The National Museums of Scotland have launched a dedicated series of web pages to support subjects and lessons across the Scottish curriculum. There are films, videos, lesson plans, activities and online exhibits.

Resources are divided by primary and secondary, and mainly cover topics across Social Subjects, Modern Languages and STEM. Resources are updated regularly and there are free newsletters to sign up to for alerts about newly released materials.

Complete Issues provides you with relevant articles and statistics for your research in a quick and easy way.

Complete Issues helps you find reliable information; supports the whole curriculum; ensures students search successfully - results will be relevant and appropriate; respond to news items and discussions with informed opinion and reliable figures, plus it is updated throughout the year. It is easy to use and readily available at home and on mobile devices.

Articles and statistics are fully searchable or can be browsed through grouped topic areas. There are also specific Focus Guides, which gather together all the relevant articles for a specific topic, such as Plastics, Animal Research and Prisons.

Complete Issues is a great companion resource to Issues Online and fantastic for essay and talks research. Most suited to S3-6.
