Introduction

Following the announcements from the Scottish Government on the cancellation of the 2021 exam diet for National 5, and then for Higher and Advanced Higher National Qualifications, the SQA put in place the Alternative Certification Model (ACM). Updates on the ACM have been shared with you and your parents/carers over recent weeks and now we are pleased to provide details of what this alternative certification means for each subject at each level, together with an Assessment Calendar for the six weeks from Tuesday 20 April until Friday 4 June.

It is very important that you go over both of these documents in extreme detail, making sure that you note every assessment in all your subjects, including a record of the date, time, paper and topic.

In this way, you will be creating your own personal assessment calendar. Your subject teachers will also remind you of planned formal assessments and give you any extra guidance required. Using your personal assessment calendar, you will be able to plan your revision timetable for the coming weeks. Your revision timetable should include some study sessions during the Easter holiday, but do be sure to balance your studies with time for relaxation, exercise and other activities.

With the SQA exams being cancelled this year, teachers will determine pupils' 'provisional results' based on the marked and quality assured evidence of pupils' performance in these April and May assessments - alongside any practical coursework components in applicable subjects. Because provisional results are moderated and quality assured, your grade is, therefore, a provisional one until all quality assurance checks have been carried out.

We will inform you of your provisional results in all your subjects near the end of June. Schools will submit provisional results to SQA by 25 June, and you will receive your results on Tuesday 10 August.

What counts as evidence in the ACM?

In line with SQA guidance, we have specified in this document what evidence will be used when deciding a provisional result in every subject at N5, H and AH level. SQA guidance stipulates that assessment evidence used for your provisional results should come from assessments which have strong 'predictive value' - put simply: assessments which produce strong and reliable evidence of your attainment. In order to produce this reliable evidence, the assessments you will be doing in April and May will take account of: breadth of course coverage, level of demand, and balance of knowledge and skills; all in line with SQA subject specific guidance.

On top of the information in this document, your teachers will ensure that you have a clear understanding of the assessment evidence being used for your provisional result. Your teachers will also be providing you with ongoing feedback relating to your progress and your attainment during this period of assessment.

Volume of assessments

Although we are giving you a structured calendar of assessments, this is not an SQA exam diet as it would be in a 'normal' academic year. Rather, this is a calendar of assessments of differing length and weighting, spread across the six weeks. You will have quite a number of assessments in each of your subjects and you may well have two (or, occasionally, three) assessments on the same day. Do not be daunted by that - you can manage!

The number of assessments you will undertake will vary across your subjects. As you know, this is due to the nature of individual subjects and how they are taught. Most of the assessments you will be sitting are fairly short and take place in the classroom, as part of normal learning and teaching. A few assessments which are slightly longer go a short way into lunchtime or beyond the school day. The assessments have been planned to avoid overburdening you, and you will have days when you do not have any assessments. You should be attending all your timetabled lessons as normal throughout this 6-week period.

There is no study leave during the assessment period so you will be in lessons throughout, consolidating your learning and receiving feedback on your progress from your teachers - in other words, helping you to prepare for forthcoming assessments.

Assessment conditions

As these are formal assessments, conditions in the classroom will be the same as they would be in a final SQA exam - you should only bring in materials required for the assessment, and mobile phones must be left elsewhere. You should not discuss the content or share any information about your assessments with anyone else. Cheating in an assessment is a very serious matter. Any pupil found to be cheating in an assessment will be dealt with as SQA would deal with an instance of cheating: the candidate risks forfeiting the complete National Qualification in the particular subject.

Teachers will ensure that all additional assessment arrangements are in place for eligible pupils.

Exceptional Circumstances and appeals

We are very aware that you have faced disruption to your learning this academic session and for some months previous to that, too. The SQA have taken account of this in their planning of the ACM and they have built in flexibility of timing and of the nature of National Qualifications course assessments. Please note that this means there is no SQA Exceptional Circumstance service this year. Exceptional Circumstance is a pre-certification exam-based service: as there are no exams, exceptional circumstances are not required.

By the beginning of May, we will have full details of the appeals process SQA will be putting in place. There is still time to have your say on how this appeals model might look for National 5, Higher, and Advanced Higher qualifications. The consultation closes on Friday 26 March.

On Wednesday 31 March, a full video presentation from Mr McCallum on the ACM and the quality assurance process will be sent to pupils and their parents and carers.

- Listening - 30 marks completed in 1 sitting

Assessment 3

- Discursive Writing - 40 marks completed in 1 sitting

For Advanced Higher Modern Languages, marks for reading and translation, listening, and discursive writing will contribute to the provisional result. The total marks available will be 120.

The removal of coursework component 3: portfolio and the cancellation of visiting assessing for component 4: performance–talking from the Advanced Higher Modern Languages course assessment in session 2020–21, means that these components must not be included in the calculation of the provisional result. They may, however, add to supplementary evidence along with UASPs, which can provide an indication of the performance level of individual candidates.
